the central bureau, as proposed, might be construed as placing responsibility upon the existing banks for genuineness of lading.

Every head must have a derby, but most every man wants a soft hat on hand.

Here they are, Dunlap, Henry Heath and Berry derby hats, $2 to $5.

Soft hats in all the curious crowns and curves $1.50 to $5. Now is the light-weight, soft-hat time.

Berry Soft hats agreeably replace the dingy straw—they are pleasant like in the warm noonday or crisp evening.

During the thirty-day period, both sides indicated that a strike was not probable.

Concerning the third objection, the committee thought that the initial American bank could be assumed to give closer information of the responsibility of its clients, and that even assuming a failure to properly discriminate in the selection of its agents, the foreign buyer, the loss from a fraudulent transaction, as assumed, would be comparatively trifling character.

With regard to the fourth objection, concerning responsibility from the form of notification, this question was submitted to the general counsel of the American Bankers' Association, and such change was made by him in draft as to make it clear that the bank handling the bill of lading held same as a pledge merely for collateral security, and assumed no responsibility for its genuineness or for quantity or quality of the cotton shipped therein.

Should Have Trial. "All the objections being eliminated, the committee reached the conclusion that the plan was a valuable one in safeguarding against forgery, and should have at least a fair trial.

"The committee therefore recommends that with the changes above enumerated, the proposed plan for the establishment of a central bureau in New York City be given favorable consideration by the exchange buying banks of the country, and announces that in making this recommendation it does not in any manner wish to convey the impression that the proposed plan is to at all interfere with the main purpose of the committee in securing legislation now before Congress in the form of the Stevens bill."

Went to Norfolk and the seaside yesterday, were caught behind this wreck, and had to be transferred to a special train sent down from this city in the night. They did not get back until about 2 o'clock this morning, but all well and in good condition. The passenger trains out from Norfolk and Richmond this morning did not reach Petersburg until this afternoon, because of the delay in transferring. Two wrecking cars were put to work on the wreck last evening, and it was expected the track would be in order by this evening. No one was hurt in the wreck, but the monetary loss is heavy.

Want to Hear From the Candidates. Petitions are being circulated to-day suggesting that the State should call a public meeting at the Academy of Music next Tuesday night, and present to the voters their claims to the office of Governor, and their views on various questions now before the people. The conditions of the meeting and bearing thereon will be discussed.

While R. H. Moore was driving on Liberty Street this morning, the wheels of his buggy sank into the soft mud of a ditch, and he was stuck. He called for a man to help him, but the man who came did not know how to help him, and he was stuck for some time. He was finally helped out by a man who came by on a horse-drawn carriage.

Mrs. Helen E. Williams, twenty-five years old, wife of R. P. Williams, died yesterday in her home in Newville, after a brief illness. She was the daughter of Charles Williams, of Prince George, and was the sister of Mrs. J. H. Berry, who died in this city about a week ago. She was survived by her sisters and three brothers, and a large circle of attached friends.

'PROUD OF IT THEN, PROUD OF IT NOW'; MARTIN'S REPLY

coat and went out so fast you could play marbles on his coat tails."

Just at this point, Senator Martin turned to Representative Carlin, who was on the platform, and asked him if his statement were true. Carlin rose and said that Jones did leave the floor of the House before the vote.

"Then sent out for two absent members of the House, but they never caught W. A. Jones," added Senator Martin.

"I never absent when I can be present," he continued.

"The gravamen of Jones' speeches is the evil, the depravity of all men except himself. He relies on wholesale attacks on everything and everybody in Virginia. His is a general denunciation of the best people. He has quoted in a speech an excerpt from the speech of a Republican Senator, to the effect that Ohio, Pennsylvania and Virginia are the most corrupt States in the Union. Do you want to send to the Senate a man who thinks that?"

"Has Attacked His Party."

"Jones has attacked the Democratic party. He has been a member of the Democratic Committee. Why did he wait until now to reveal his treachery?"

"He has assailed J. Taylor Ellissson. Where will you find a more faithful or efficient man? Jones has assailed the Governor of the State, one of the purest and best of men."

"Jones says the Virginia State capital is in Washington. I am a powerful, big man, according to W. A. Jones. In truth, I really am an humble pawn in the political scheme of the day. Jones says the Governor is the pawn. Why? Because Jones is the pawn. Jones is something showing that the capital is in Washington."

"Jones assails the Legislature, but it is impossible to dominate such a body."

"Jones," said Senator Martin, "declares that no judge can be appointed without the assent of the senior Senator. Do you think Judge Keith and Judge Cardwell would get down and grovel before any man that ever lived, even to save their lives?"

After rapping Mr. Jones as a "common slanderer," Senator Martin ridiculed the idea that he appointed all the officeholders. He said he did not know the name of the circuit judge of Loudoun or a number of other officeholders in the county in which he was speaking.

"If any officeholders ever got on their knees to me, I wasn't there. I wouldn't help a man who did that."

"I am a humble, plain, unpretentious little man, attending to his business, and interfering with no one's else. If I am as powerful as Jones says I am, don't you think he's a terrible power? If I had one-tenth of the power he ascribes to me, I would rule the world. I have no such power. The ring I belong to is the Democratic party of Virginia, to whom I appeal for justice and fair play."

Taking up the charge of Mr. Jones that he was a lobbyist twenty years ago, Senator Martin said that better men than he had represented corporations before the Legislature. The lobbyist is recognized by law.

"Hiddenly False."

"I never did it," asserted Senator Martin. "It is the same old tale, ridiculous. Why don't Jones tell me what railroad he thinks I ever lobbied for? I'll resign my seat in the Senate. If he is a man of honor, let him give the information. This method of proof would be easy and affirmative. Let him name the company he thinks I ever lobbied for."

was my client. He ought to put up or shut up. Let him trot out his men, and cannot find a man in the Legislature big enough liar to bear false witness against his neighbor."

"You can't prove a negative. That's a rule of logic. Let Jones name the act and produce the member of the Legislature I am said to have approached."

Senator Martin read a part of twenty-five letters he had received from former members of the Legislature, declaring him never to have lobbied in any way.

The press, he said, had been attacked by Jones. "Nineteen out of twenty of the newspapers and magazines said Senator Martin. Those that are not are few, scattered, straggling."

"Every paper is subsidized that don't support Jones," was the speaker's sarcastic comment.

Saying that whether or not the famous letters were stolen makes no difference, so far as his responsibility is concerned, Senator Martin severely attacked Representative Jones for "reaching stolen goods." It was a "breach of morality, and if you don't think so, God have mercy on the state of your morbid morality."

Taking up a somewhat local matter, Senator Martin said that Mr. Jones had misrepresented that the Washington substitution was to be introduced by the late Congressman Rixey. The speaker declared that it was by the record shown to be due to the efforts of Representative Carlin and himself.

Senator Martin spoke over two hours, overcoming with a noble effort his weak voice and physical exhaustion. He was introduced by Captain J. W. Foster. Senator Martin said that he had never received a more hearty greeting than that at Leesburg to-day, and that he had a successful meeting at Chincoteague last night.
